COUNTY TO FINISH WOLF ROAD PAVING

BIDS WILL BE RECEIVED NEXT WEEK FOR COMPLETION OF WOLF ROAD TO LINCOLN HIGHWAY

The much fought for, and long delayed completion of the paving of Wolf Road from the Hickory Creek bridge south to the Lincoln Highway, will at last be realized, thus giving Mokena the long sought connection with the Lincoln highway, when bids for the construction of the remaining mile of paving will be received by the Will County Board of Supervisors at the office of the County Superintendent of Highways in the Court House in Joliet next Wednesday morning, March 18, at 10:30 a. m.

The pavement is to be 20 feet wide with 10 foot earth shoulders. The pavement will be continued from the Hickory creek bridge southwest thru the former McCord farm land, thence up the present gravel road south thence southeastward thru the C. M. Cleveland timberland and then connect with the Lincoln Highway.

This is the last piece of road to be paved on the Will County Bond Issue of $1,800,000. This piece of road has been the most fought against and also fought for, piece of highway in Will County. The road as originally laid out was to run straight thru the Cleveland timber and Mr. Cleveland put up a hard court fight to prevent this plan from being carried out. After much litigation and numerous court hearings, a compromise agreement was affected between the county and Mr. Cleveland whereby the highway was re-routed to avoid going thru certain parts of Mr. Cleveland's timber but a denser part of the timber is cut thru by the new routing.

Mr. Cleveland dedicated the right of way thru his timberland up to the Lincoln Highway and also south of the Lincoln Highway up to the Michigan Central railroad. The Wolf Road paving will be continued south to route 51 by the State highway department after the connection with Lincoln highway is completed according to Will County officials.

The Mokena Wolf road boosters have at last realized the object for which they have been working and fighting since 1928, when the paving of Wolf road was first considered.

The next move should be to interest Cook County to continue the paving of Wolf road from 143rd street north across the canal to connect with the pavement already laid thru Desplaines, Western Springs and points north to Wheeling and thus complete the outer belt highway of the Chicago territory. In years to come Wolf road will be one of the most important highways in the State of Illinois and will greatly aid in the development of this section of Will County as well as Cook County.

It is understood that the Wolf road paving to the Lincoln highway will be finished in July or August of this year.

A WPA project which calls for the expenditure of $800 a month in salaries in Tinley Park, was successfully arranged at a joint meeting of the Tinley Park Business Men's association, Mayor August Habenicht of Tinley Park and members of the village board held in the Tinley Park public school last Friday night. The government was represented by H. H. Schuller.

The project as outlined is as follows:

Building of recreational projects such as baseball diamonds, tennis courts, creation of sewing classes, art work, etc. Eleven men will be taken off the relief rolls and placed on a salary basis. Workers will be paid from $55 to $94 per month according to their skill and ability.

In addition the government will pay $200 for office equipment, tennis balls, bats, balls, etc. All of these activities will not cost the local taxpayers one cent, as the government is primarily interested in getting people off the relief rolls onto a self sustaining job.

Work on this recreational project which will be of four months duration, is to start within the next week or two.

Just where the baseball fields and tennis courts are to be located has not been fully decided, but these decisions will be made within the next few days.

Tinley Park is fortunate in land- ing this project which will put $800 into circulation in the community each month for the next four months at least.

Similar projects have been allotted to 13 neighboring towns in Cook County.

It is understood that all of the work will be done and supervised by Tinley Park people.

LIGHTFOOT CATCHES A GLIMPSE OF THE STRANGER

LIGHTFOOT the Deer was unhappy. It was a strange unhappiness, an unhappiness such as he had never known before. You see, he had discovered that there was a stranger in the Green Forest, a stranger of his own kind, another deer. He knew it by dainty footprints in the mud along the Laughing Brook and on the edge of the pond of Paddy the Beaver. He knew it by other signs which he ran across every now and then. But search as he would, he was unable to find the newcomer. He had searched everywhere, but always he was just too late. The stranger had gone.

Now there was no anger in Lightfoot's desire to find the stranger. Instead, there was a great longing. For the first time in his life Lightfoot felt lonely. So he hunted and hunted and was unhappy. He lost appetite. He slept little. He roamed about uneasily, looking, listening, testing every Merry Little Breeze, but all in vain.

Then, one never-to-be-forgotten night, as he drank at the Laughing Brook, a strange feeling swept over him. It was the feeling of being watched. Lightfoot lifted his beautiful head and a slight movement caught his quick eyes and drew them to a thicket not far away. The silvery light of gentle Mistress Moon fell full on that thicket and thrust out from it was the most beautiful head in all the Great World. At least that is the way it seemed to Lightfoot, though the truth is, it was not as beautiful as his own, for it was uncrowned by antlers. For a long minute Lightfoot stood gazing. A pair of wonderful, great, soft eyes gazed back at him. Then that beautiful head disappeared.

With a mighty bound Lightfoot cleared the Laughing Brook and rushed over to the thicket in which that beautiful head had disappeared. He plunged in, but there was no one there. Frantically he searched. But that thicket was empty. Then he stood still and listened. Not a sound reached him. It was as still as if there were no other living things in all the Green Forest. The beautiful stranger had slipped away as silently as a shadow.

All the rest of that night Lightfoot searched through the Green Forest, but his search was in vain. The longing to find that beautiful stranger had become so great that he fairly ached with it. It seemed to him that until he found her he could know no happiness.

A WOMAN'S EYESby

SOMETHING ON GRATITUDE

"DEAR Jean Newton: I think one of the lowest qualities of which the human race is capable is ingratitude. And yet the people who in other ways are not low are guilty of it. I see so much around me, people failing to appreciate favors and efforts on the part of others which they themselves would be none too ready to render someone else. It seems there are a good many people with two codes, two rules of measurement. One is for what they should do for others—and frequently it is a very small rule of measurement. The other is for what they may expect from others. And there they take a good deal for granted, frequently accepting everything casually and without gratitude. I think the subject is worth a few words from you."

Gratitude—it is an old subject, and wiser minds than mine have spoken on it. When writing the above our reader friend must have been laboring under the reaction from a bitter experience. For it would be a sad world if ingratitude were indeed so common a quality. For my part, I have not found it so; my small efforts for others have always been appreciated beyond their deserts. Yet we know that here and there in this large community that we call the world there is the type of person who is casual in what he accepts from others and thoughtless when it comes to appreciation.

I have come across a recent utterance on the subject by a well-known minister, who said from the pulpit that "the emotion of gratitude is the tenderest of human feelings; it may be ranked with love, sympathy, benevolence." To me that is sentimentalizing the matter. It makes gratitude an original quality, reflecting credit on the one who feels it. I feel rather with our reader that in all decency gratitude should be involuntary, a natural reaction to kindness on the part of others—and that not to feel it in such cases is indeed base. However, our reader should remember—and it may help to avoid the canker of bitterness—that people are not all alike in manifesting their emotions, that the lack of immediate expression does not necessarily denote a lack of appreciation.

The Word "Busses"

The word is a shortened form of "omnibus," the plural of which is "omnibuses." When the final syllable is used alone the tendency is to double the "s" to preserve the short sound of the "u." Webster's New International Dictionary allows both plurals, preferring the doubled "s."

"We read that the average woman uses three times her weight in cosmetics during her life time," says rougemazed Rosie, "so now we not only know what has kept the woman in the red for life but the husband too."

THINK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

The strong
May lead, but not for long,
Though strength may conquer for a time,
And yet
The victors I have met
Used heads as well as hands to climb.
The wise
Watch both the trail and skies,
Observe the sun, select a star—
Yes, they
Who wisely chose the way
The final victors always are.

Make sure
The truth that will endure
Is your equipment on the quest;
The trail
Too short may often fail,
The longer road may be the best.
Mere strength
Will lose the lead at length,
Stand baffled by some sudden brink.
While on
And up some man has gone,
Some man who took the time to think.

National Guard Named So to Honor Marquis de Lafayette

When the Marquis de Lafayette made his memorable visit to the United States in 1824 he was the retired commander of the National Guards of Paris. A New York city military organization, now known as the Seventh regiment—in the World war it was the One Hundred and Seventh regiment—sought to honor Lafayette by taking the name, National Guards, and eventually the militia of the various states came to be designated as the National Guard.

The Seventh regiment's distinctive uniform of gray coat, white trousers and shako also dates from Lafayette's visit, when it was improvised by a sergeant who could not find his blue tunic and wore instead his gray business jacket, which chanced to be tight-fitting and brass-buttoned and made a hit with his superior officers.

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

CHAPTER I

The house stood alone on a sand-dune overlooking the sea—dark, deserted, and silent, except for the swish of the rain blowing against its shingles. Wet to his skin, and shivering, the Duke struggled to pry open a window.

From his dank coat pocket, the Duke drew a cheap jackknife and a tiny searchlight. With these in his hands, he turned to look toward the highway. It was invisible, two hundred yards from the porch on which he stood, winding over and around and about these dunes.

The Duke's thumb pressed the button, and, momentarily, the ray revealed waving wet beach-grass, and a single scrub pine bent in the wind. Then, carefully, he began cutting away the dry putty that held a pane of glass. It was slow work. "Why don't I break the damned thing?" the Duke asked himself, and, a minute later, felt the unshattered glass drop into his hand.

It was easy to open the window, then, and easy for a slim and agile man to climb through. Once inside the house, he paused. Would the electric lights be working, and would it be safe to turn them on? Why not? Half the summer residences in Southampton had been opened for the season. Even an observant passer-by—if there were to be one—would think a brightly lighted room less remarkable than a furtive ray. The Duke touched a switch his searchlight had disclosed beside a door.

It was exactly the sort of room he had expected—a luxurious breakfast room in a luxurious summer residence. Most of the furniture was covered, but a gay breakfast table stood in the center, and, beyond it, was an open door to a pantry. The Duke walked through, and into the kitchen, turning on lights as he went. "Guess they're going to open the house pretty soon. After all, why should they mind an extra weekend guest?"

He grinned, and anyone who had seen that grin might have found it hard to mind. It was an ingratiating grin, in a pleasant, likeable face. A lean face, weather-beaten and a little honeyed, but with large, kind, steel-gray eyes, surmounted by a thatch of unruly brick-red hair. The Duke's trim figure stretched a tidy six feet above the worn soles of his untidy boots, but his gray suit, though worn, too, and wet, was well cut and well made, revealing square shoulders and firm muscles.

"Wonder if there's any grub," said the Duke.

All the kitchen shelves bore brightly colored tin boxes, with bright lettering, but they were empty. The bread-box was empty, of course; no use opening that. But above the shelves was a cupboard, and in that cupboard were rows of canned things—each can neatly wrapped in paper—sardines, anchovies, caviar, chicken, ham, tongue—all sorts of things. "Hospitable people," said the Duke. "I wonder where they keep the coffee."

Thirty minutes later, His Grace had dined sustainingly, if not well. Half the contents of the pot of coffee still bubbling on the stove had warmed him comfortably, and he washed the dishes. Then he put everything back in place, turned out the lights, and, whistling merrily, went upstairs.

At the top of the steps was a kind of library—book-lined, with doors on either side, and, at its end, windows facing the sea. Even through the blackness, the intruder could discern the almost luminous white of breaking waves.

Again, he touched a switch, and, this time, lights sprang into being in shaded table-lamps, doubly shaded now by winter wrappings. A fire had been laid in the grate. He lit the fire, and a cigar, and then opened a door on his right.

This was a man's room, gracious and inviting. The Duke felt the mattress drawn back over the footboard of the bed, and, sniffing a pungent odor of cedar and camphor, turned his attention to a closet across the room. A very large closet, with an electric light in it, and built-in drawers, and a cedar chest. Atop the chest were two pairs of slippers, and above it hung the only garment visible, a blue-striped dressing gown of soft, light flannel. His own apparel still clinging damply, the Duke took the dressing gown and slippers back to the blazing fire, and, standing luxuriously before it, changed his clothes.

Still neat, he carried the gray suit and the wet undergarments back to the bedroom, folded the trousers carefully, and laid them on the box-spring. With one hand, he flung the mattress into place over them.

He returned to the fire, stretching himself lazily in the huge, over-stuffed chair. Outside, the storm was growing steadily worse. Wind-flung against the windows, the rain kept up its incessant swish. A little puddle formed on one of the sills. The Duke mopped it up with an old cloth that had been spread over the big chair, and looked through the glass into a cluster of bushes, illuminated from the windows, that tossed their tops frantically, as though moved by wild despair. "It's a filthy night," the man in the dressing gown thought, as he sauntered back to the crackling logs, drawing contentedly at his cigar, and pausing to take a book from the loaded shelves. "A filthy night."

In the thick of it he had been an hour before. Penniless, overcoatless, trudging along the cement-paved road from Bridgehampton, five miles to the east. Was it five miles, he thought, or fifteen, or fifty? On foot, he had left New York that morning just after day-break. Jobless and flat broke.

For a month—all through April, in fact—the Duke had tramped the streets looking for "a regular job." "What the h—l makes me want to keep straight?" he had asked himself, again and again. "That's all right for guys with an income. If somebody'd started me in a rubber-tired pram, and wheeled me into college, and out again into papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not? Who couldn't be a knight in armor? But being a knight without armor—that's different. When you get dumped into a fight, naked, with nothing but your bare fists, and the whole world coming at you with brick-bats and brass knuckles, what a d—d fool you are to stick to the Marquis of Queensbury Rules!"

Still, he had stuck—reasonably, at least—in the face of what seemed almost a conspiracy of discouragement. Fired out of Hollywood for a theft of which he was innocent as an unborn babe. "All right," he had said; "I've got a few hundreds saved, and I'll go East, and start all over again." Confidently, he had left the railway station in Chicago, only to have his pocket picked before he had got as far as the hotel. He had nearly frozen in Chicago. He had nearly starved. And then he had hitch-hiked to New York, riding freights when he could. A pal had christened him "the Duke," because of his clothes, and his English, and the grand manner he had acquired in Filmdom.

New York—with those Hollywood shoes wearing thin, and that Hollywood gray suit, that had cost $125, getting frayed and baggy. Part of a jobless army in a city without jobs. He had eaten his overcoat—or the proceeds from it, at any rate—and paid the last dime for a bunk in a flop-house.

A love of books, a sense of humor, and the wanderlust—these he had inherited from an Irish father, whose name was Francis X. Gilbert, and whose proudest boast was that he came from the University of Dublin. He had died in China, nearly six years ago, leaving the seventeen-year-old boy, Barry, to fight his way from Hong Kong to Hollywood, and from Chicago to New York. And so Barry had crossed the Queensboro Bridge to Long Island, and picked up a truck, and charmed the driver into buying him a pretty good lunch at Huntington, Bay Shore in a passing car, and Sayville on foot, and another truck to Bridgehampton, where he had lost his bearings and tramped back miles before he found himself again on the edge of Southampton.

It was black night, and beginning to rain. A cold wind had sprung up from the northeast. An endless, winding road, and wind-and-rain-swept dunes, with solitary houses. Grand houses they were, all of them. A few had lights inside—and dogs wandering about, as he had discovered in the course of two desperate excursions. Most of these dwellings were dark and vacant. "Houses without people," the Duke had muttered, still not-too-resentfully, "and people without houses. It doesn't seem fair."

His teeth were chattering by now, and his feet squished in his wet shoes. And this house had seemed so utterly deserted, so entirely safe and secure. "Ten o'clock," said the Duke. "What's the chance of anyone finding me in there tonight? And, if they do, it's better than freezing to death. I'll be on my way again at daybreak."

Now, fed and warm, he was growing drowsy before the fire. "It must be swell to live like this all the time," he brooded, dreamily. "I wouldn't break into anybody's house if I had one like this. Gosh, I guess I'll sleep here. It's warmer than the bed, and I've got a long hike ahead of me in the morning." His head fell forward, and his eyes were closing, when he heard an automobile door slam, and, an instant later, voices and the shuffling of feet on the porch directly beneath him.

The Duke sprang to the electric switch.

Fast he moved, his wits worked faster still.

"No," he thought; "that won't do. If the lights go out, they'll know there's something wrong!"

The breakfast room window—that was it! But not in dressing gown and slippers. "Damned fool, to take my clothes off!" thought the Duke. Who were these people, anyway, driving up to a closed house at this hour? Thieves? Stragglers, like himself? Hardly—in a big limousine like that he glimpsed hastily from the window.

Well, what next? Jail, probably. How long could they give a man for unlawful entry? "Damn!" said the Duke. And then he heard the lower door open, and a woman's voice in the hall. "Maybe I can talk my way out," he thought, and started down the stairs. "Who's there?" he called, bravely, as his feet touched the first landing.

A man answered. "Willets," he said. "Willets, the butler. Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

And the lights went on.

Standing there, on the landing naked except for the dressing gown, the Duke found himself facing a party of four. Willets, with his hat in his hand, squat and powerfully built and ludicrously bald. Another man in a chauffeur's uniform, and two women—one quite young, and the other middle-aged and stout. They seemed propitiously, and the fact gave him instant courage.

"Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

The question had been asked first in the dark, but now it was repeated in a glare that made every face plainly visible. The butler didn't know Mr. Ridder, then. That was "a lucky break." It would give him time to dress, and get away.

"Yes," he answered, quietly. "You're a little late, aren't you?"

"Sorry, sir," said the butler. "I didn't have any idea you'd be here, sir. Your mother said you wasn't coming until tomorrow. Evans had to take 'em down to the ship—her and your father, sir—and then he had to go back to the hotel, and pick up me, and cook, and the maid. The storm didn't help, neither, and we stopped at Patchogue for dinner. I hope you ain't going to be put out, sir."

Alluring Daytime Frock With Distinctive Yoke

1832-B

The yoke of this frock is unusual and a distinctive departure from the obvious round or squared-off affair, because it extends out over the shoulders and forms flaring little caps—caps which conceal two inverted pleats and which are transformed into lovely loose raglan sleeves. The blouse gathers at the yoke and waist in front and back, rendering fullness and a soft drapery appearance. The twin panels in the skirt give you height, and the skirt an added swirl. Two huge gathered pockets in unison with the blouse are interesting features and very practical. Make a self-fabric belt trimmed with a diamond shaped buckle and two harmonizing buttons, and notice how smart and up to the minute your frock will be.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1832-B is available in sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44, and can be procured for fifteen cents. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 35-inch material.

The Barbara Bell Pattern Book featuring Spring designs is ready. Send fifteen cents today for your copy.

Still Drumming Up Church

Attendance in Dutch Towns

An attendance drummer has been newly appointed at Hoogeveen, Holland, to call the people to church. The old custom of drumming up church attendance persists there as in some other Dutch towns. Every Sunday morning and evening, the drummer marches through the main streets of Hoogeveen, drumming with all his might, to let the faithful know that it is time to get ready for divine service.

BEFORE BABY COMES

Elimination of Body Waste Is Doubly Important

In the crucial months before baby arrives it is vitally important that the body be rid of waste matter. Your intestines must function—regularly, completely without griping.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—much pleasanter to take than liquid. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system, and insure regular, complete elimination without pain or effort. Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

Firestone TIRES

RUN up to 28° COOLER

Every truck operator knows that internal friction causes heat and heat is the greatest destroyer of tire life. The only way to counteract friction and heat is by Gum-Dipping, the Firestone patented process which soaks the cords in liquid rubber, saturating and coating each tiny cotton fiber and strand within the cord, counteracting friction and heat at their very source. As a result of this patented process, Firestone Tires run up to 28° cooler than tires built without Gum-Dipped Cords.

This is why Firestone Tires are used by thousands and thousands of truck operators from coast to coast, including the largest transportation fleets. These operators choose tires strictly on performance...they know that Firestone Tires give them more dependable service at lowest cost per mile. See your nearby Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer today and start reducing your operating costs.

FIRESTONE TIRES RUN COOLER

This scientific instrument accurately measures the heat generated in tires at high sustained speeds. Firestone Tires run up to 28° cooler than tires built without Gum-Dipped Cords—this means added strength, greater dependability and longer mileage.

Theme for Sunday morning: "The Intelligence Required for Building a Christian World."

There have been times in Christian history when the exercise of human intelligence in religion was looked upon with disfavor. Happily, those days are rapidly passing. Our grave danger now is that we may be content to give intelligence too narrow a meaning. One mark of an intelligent man is that he knows the facts. Another is that he be able to evaluate quite critically those facts, and determine their relative importance. We shall suggest next Sunday certain facts about our selves, our religion, our interdependent life in the modern world. We shall consider what these facts mean as they have to do with our major concern of building a Christian world. We believe this theme will be of especial interest to those who are concerned about the price of deep and serious thought.

For the next few Sunday mornings Mr. Hastings will lead a group of boys and girls aged twelve and above in a study of the meaning of church membership. The class meets at the regular church school hour. All boys and girls of this age who are interested in this subject are invited to share in the class sessions.

Again may we remind you of the special Sunday evening services beginning March 22. Some splendid music is being arranged, and the sermons will deal with certain vital aspects of personal religion. Watch the advertising columns of this paper next week for a more detailed announcement.

We are glad almost every Sunday to welcome new people to our services. If you have recently moved to Tinley Park, we invite you to our congregation. You will have an opportunity for real Christian fellowship with your neighbors.

THE SOJO EMERALD

By CARLTON JAMES

© Associated Newspapers.
WNU Service.

NEWS of the theft of the famous Sojo emerald from a jewelry store in Phoenix, Ariz., was telephoned from Flagstaff to Ranger Chet Longman at the Grand Canyon. The bandits, according to the Flagstaff authorities, were believed to be members of the famous Donahue gang. They were also believed to be "hiding out" in a certain party of tourists that had that morning left by train for a two-day visit at the canyon.

Ranger Longman jotted this down on a pad of paper, donned his slicker and stepped out into the blinding rain-storm that had broken a half hour ago, after sunset.

Lightning illuminated his path as he crossed to the lodge where the party of tourists was being accommodated.

Before entering, he glanced through a window that looked on to the main community room and was startled to see one of the women, an oldish person whom he had remembered as having given her address as a small town in northern Maine, throw up her hands, scream and pitch forward in a dead faint.

Ranger Longman strode quickly to the door, stepped inside and discovered a scene of wild excitement.

Besides the nine tourists who composed the party, the gathering included Ranger Tom Darcy. Darcy was doing his best to restore order, and finally succeeded, with Ranger Longman's help.

"What's it all about, Tom?" Longman asked when quiet once more prevailed.

Tom grinned.

"Mrs. Appleby," he gestured toward the Maine woman, who had recovered and was emitting low moans, "mistook you for a ghost. You see, I went on, 'I've just finished telling the folks the story of Nishqua, the Hopi Indian maiden, who, betrayed by her lover, jumped to her death years ago from the rim of the canyon. You remember how the story ends—about Nishqua sometimes coming back to make sure that no others are betrayed as she was. Well, when you looked in at the window, Mrs. Appleby thought it was the ghost of Nishqua.'"

"I see," said Ranger Longman, but he didn't laugh, because his mood was far from humorous.

Instead, he glared around at the guests and explained his mission.

"Two of you," he finished, "a man and a woman, are members of the

He Was Startled to See One of the Women Pitch Forward in a Dead Faint.

Donahue outfit. I intend to find out which. First, you'll all have to submit to being searched."

The tourists were awed and startled. Gradually their awe changed to indignation and anger.

Ranger Longman wasn't like Darcy, the type of man to excite their confidence and respect. He was ugly, and they resented his domineering manner. Some of them refused bluntly to being searched.

Whereupon Ranger Longman became more ugly still and declared that a search would be made, whether the guests liked it or not.

He was about to carry out his threat when the lights went out.

There was a lot of scrambling about and screaming.

And above the pandemonium of sound came Ranger Longman's angry voice, cursing freely.

His bellowing was drowned out by the sound of splintering glass.

And then, plainly outlined, a face appeared at the window.

It was, unmistakably, the face of an Indian maiden.

It was there only a moment, then vanished.

At this moment, Ranger Darcy reached for the light switch.

Without waiting to see what had happened, he dashed outside in search of the "ghost" and found nothing.

Returning, he discovered that three of the women had fainted, one man had disappeared, and a young chap named Ken Austin, looking entirely bewildered, was standing in the middle of the room holding a small box in his hand, which later proved to contain the Sojo emerald.

Another young man, Roger Daniels by name, a newlywed, was sprawled face down on the floor, cut and bruised.

The man who had disappeared was named Crichton, and without a doubt he had been hurled over the brink of the canyon, as evidenced by a shattered observation window.

Ranger Longman wanted to arrest young Austin on the spot, but Tom Darcy favored hearing the youth's story.

Austin told a tale that sounded plausible enough to be believed.

In the darkness, some one had slipped the box into his pocket, probably realizing that a search would reveal the real thief's guilt.

"I don't believe it," Longman snapped. "Come along, you."

"Wait a minute," said Tom. "I believe it. Anyway, arresting the kid won't clear up this business about the ghost. Let's wait a bit."

They waited.

Young Daniels was restored to consciousness and his wounds treated. He said he had been attacked by some one with a knife.

Eventually the guests were sent to bed.

Left alone, Tom went outside to look around, and Longman sat down to think.

While he was sitting there, the "ghost" appeared at the window again. Longman saw her himself this time, and goose pimples appeared on his skin.

But he remembered his duty, suppressed his fear and took a potshot at the face.

The face disappeared and Longman rushed to the door and ran after a dim figure he saw vanishing in the darkness.

While he was gone, Ranger Darcy, attracted by the shots, returned to the lodge, found it empty, and began an investigation.

He examined the window through which Mr. Crichton had been thrown, and discovered blood on the jagged glass. An idea occurred to him, and he raced upstairs, just in time to meet Mr. and Mrs. Daniels, the newlyweds, dressed and packed, about to beat a stealthy retreat.

Tom jabbed a gun into Mr. Daniels' ribs and accused him of being one of the Donahues.

"You threw Crichton through the window, because he saw you stuffing the box into Austin's pocket. That's how you cut your arm—on the window."

"Yeah," said Daniels, "prove it!"

"It's proven," said Darcy, "because Crichton didn't go over the rim. He caught on a tree, and I rescued him."

Daniels wet his lips, but he wouldn't have confessed, had not his wife broken down and pleaded for mercy.

Tom herded his prisoners back to the community room and found Ranger Longman seated there in friendly conversation with a white girl wearing Indian clothes.

He recognized her as Lou Fairfield, reporter from a Flagstaff paper.

"Our paper got a tip about Donahue," she explained, "and I flew up here to get a story. Got lost after leaving the airport, and wound up at the Hopi house. The squaws loaned me these clothes. When I looked through the window I decided the psychological moment to announce myself wasn't at hand. So I beat it." She grinned.

"And scared everyone out of a year's growth," said Tom. "Well, you'd better stick around till morning so the folks can see what a real live ghost looks like."

Which Lou agreed to do, and did.

The guests looked her over and said, of course they hadn't believed the story about Nishqua anyhow, but it was nice to know that the thing that looked in at the window the night before was human.

Scientists Seeking Data on Early Mesopotamians

In the sixth millennium before Christ, a migrating horde swept from the east over India, Persia and Mesopotamia. Many more waves of invasion were to break over the hills and valleys of these lands; it is not even likely that this was the first. But we still know so little about the early movements of man in Mesopotamia that we cannot say whether any race was there to receive this horde, for wherever their remains have been found they lie at the bottom of all other identifiable human remains, writes Jotham Johnson, of the University museum, Philadelphia, in the Scientific American.

Their most typical product was their earthenware vessels, for cooking and other household purposes, painted with distinctive geometric designs. This pottery has been found in test pits and trench excavations at such sites as Tell Kukuleni in Baluchistan, at Susa and Tepe Hissar in Persia, at Tell Halaf and Nineveh in northern Mesopotamia, and at al-Ubaid near Ur in Babylonia, and with it has come to light nothing of the culture, no associated objects, only broken shreds of the vessels themselves.

In spite of the vast territory these peoples once controlled, literally nothing has been known about them—nothing about their racial type, their language, their arts and crafts, nothing except that they painted their pottery. For lack of any better description they may be called the "painted pottery people." Yet in the history of mankind no race now presents at once so potentially important a position together with so deep a mystery.

In 1927 Dr. E. A. Speiser, exploring the mounds clustered in the upper Tigris valley, paid particular attention to the "great mound," Tepe Gawra. It had been observed by previous travelers, but its significance had not been suspected. Later that year Doctor Speiser was able to run a successful and enlightening trial trench with funds supplied by the American School of Oriental Research in Baghdad. Of 20 cities neatly stratified on the tell, the lowest nine showed painted pottery as their typical find.

For centuries bread has been a mainstay food all over the world. Bread can be a variety of things, from a mixture of flour, yeast and water to a product made with these, plus butter, milk, eggs, currants, raisins and other things. Because bread can be served in so many ways, it lends itself to almost any menu. It blends with nearly every other food.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—A routine War department order came through the other day which said, cryptically:

Thunder Over Hagood

"By direction of the President, Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, U. S. A., is relieved from assignment to the command of the Eighth corps area and further duty at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Major General Hagood will proceed to his home and await orders."

Each day, there comes from the War department anywhere from two or three to a couple of dozen orders by which army officers are transferred from one post to another, from one assignment to another or given new instructions. It is not unusual at all. That is why I said at the outset of this item that the order respecting General Hagood was routine. But it was routine only in the language that was used. Otherwise, it was significant. Just how significant it will prove to be remains as a secret to be unfolded by the future. Suffice to say that seldom has one minor incident of government administration created such a storm as this army order because it has become a political issue. General Hagood is the third ranking officer in the United States army. He has been in the service something like forty years. His record is generally regarded as distinguished, but at the same time he has never been a pussfoot. He has spoken boldly, sometimes too boldly and sometimes out of turn, yet I think it is generally agreed that General Hagood is sincere.

But, to go back of the "routine army order" by which he was summarily relieved of his command at the important army post of Fort Sam Houston, we find a record of General Hagood's testimony before an appropriations committee in the house of representatives. In that testimony, General Hagood spoke with his usual bluntness. He apparently offended somebody when he did it. His testimony has been criticized and commended, the War department and Secretary Dern have been attacked and defended and even President Roosevelt has been dragged into the controversy because somewhere, somehow New Deal opposition has become convinced that President Roosevelt and Secretary Dern punished General Hagood by removing him from his post because he dared to point out flukes and flaws and ridiculous aspects in New Deal policies of handling taxpayers' money.

General Hagood was called before the appropriations committee by its chairman and told to express his candid sentiments, his honest convictions and any constructive suggestions he might have respecting improvement of the United States army. The general, somewhat blusteringly, related to the committee that the army must have additional housing facilities. He related conditions in many army posts and asserted that many persons on relief were accorded better places to live than Uncle Sam's soldiers.

That part aroused no particular controversy but when General Hagood told the committee of the difficulty the responsible army authorities have in getting money with which to provide better housing for the soldiers, he stepped on administration toes by saying that it was more difficult to get "five cents for a pencil than a thousand dollars with which to teach Civilian Conservation corps boys new hobbies or boondoggling." He said he could get a hundred dollars to build a gravel walk and a rose garden but could not get ten dollars with which to repair a broken steam pipe in an army barracks.

The next outburst by the general brought forth his description that money being handled by Relief Administrator Hopkins was stage money; that nothing worth while or of a permanent character was being done with that money and the explanation that he called it stage money because "it is being handed around and you can do nothing with it in the end." His plea was that some of these funds which he said were being otherwise wasted should be employed to build structures of concrete and steel "that can be shown to our grandchildren 50 years from now."

In hearing General Hagood's testimony, the committee understood that the War department had given him permission to speak freely. Indeed, such assurance had been passed along to the committee from the War department but apparently the War department did not know what General Hagood had on his chest. If it had known, it certainly could have expected exactly such expressions because General Hagood never has pulled his punches. He has said each time what he thought.

By saying what he thought, however, he undoubtedly moved across the line of discretion. Army officers must guard their speech. They are under disciplinary regulations. It has to be so. Otherwise, we would see frequent outbursts by army officers in opposition to established policies, rules and regulations and it takes no stretch of the imagination to see what a disordered mess would result.

On the other hand, General Hagood was certainly privileged to believe that his observations were being made only for the committee of congress before which he appeared. The doors to the committee room were closed and locked and only committee members were in attendance. It happened, however, that subsequently the stenographic record of the committee hearings was made public and when that happened, the storm broke. Almost simultaneously with the removal of the bond of secrecy on the committee record, the War department order degrading General Hagood was published. When that happened, the politicians literally blew up. They shouted charges of censorship, terrorism by the President and Secretary Dern, dictatorship, political punishment and half a dozen other vicious accusations.

A few of the administration spokesmen in congress defended the War department action. Almost in the same breath these administration spokesmen sought conferences with Secretary Dern and others in an attempt to persuade the President and the war secretary to soften the punishment but those moves were futile and Representative Blanton, Texas Democrat, shouted on the floor of the house that the Hagood punishment would cost the Democratic party "a million votes unless it were withdrawn."

As a part of the defense of the War department action, Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff of the army, made public his memorandum to the secretary of war respecting General Hagood's attitude and his testimony before the congressional committee. In the course of this 2,000-word memorandum, General Craig described General Hagood as a "wise-cracker," and he was probably correct in so far as General Hagood's remarks about stage money were concerned. Yet, I have found very few among the Washington observers whose opinions are worth while who saw in the Craig memorandum any real justification for the severe punishment meted out to General Hagood.

The order still stands. General Hagood is going to his home in Charleston, S. C., "to await orders." No one familiar with the army procedure expects that General Hagood ever again will be given an army assignment. He will be sixty-four years old next year and at that time automatically retires from active duty. So there is hardly any question but that General Hagood has held his last command.

The whole situation, suddenly come to be known as the Hagood case, is bound to be multiplied and mirrored. It will figure in the coming political campaign because, however justified the War department action may have been in the interest of discipline and good army administration, there are thousands of individuals who never will be convinced that the Hagood removal was for any purpose other than as punishment because he criticized New Deal spending policies.

Although there is, and can be, no connection between the two, it was the basis for a really humorous reaction that during the time when the controversy raged over General Hagood's removal from his Texas army post, a federal government committee was busily engaged in making plans for federal participation in the Texas Centennial exposition which opens at Dallas June 6. Uncle Sam is spending $3,000,000—the largest sum congress ever has authorized for federal participation in such a show—so that twenty-odd government agencies can display to exposition visitors what the government has done with its billions since the cards were shuffled for the New Deal.

U. S. at Dallas Fair

The Agriculture department, as usual, will be represented by the largest of all federal exhibits. The Commerce department and the State, War, Navy, Treasury, Justice, Post Office, Interior and Labor departments will have their booths or buildings. The Federal Housing administration and the Farm Credit administration will be there with displays of their wares, and the Public Health service will attempt to further the cause of health in its usual splendid fashion.

One unusual feature of the government's participation will be a negro building in which it will tell the story of the negro race and its progress since the first slaves were brought into America. Plans call for the use of negro labor in the construction of this exhibit building and as far as possible negroes will prepare the exhibits.

The Bridal Veil

Why the bride wears a veil at her wedding has been the subject of many an argument among scholars. Some authorities believe that the bridal veil originated in the ancient practice of hiding the bride's face to show her submission. Others contend the opposite—that the veil originally was an emblem of independence.

JESUS TEACHES HIS DISCIPLES TO PRAY

LESSON TEXT—Luke 11:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—If we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us.—1 John 5:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When We Pray.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Jesus Says About Prayer, YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Should We Pray?

Prayer is a matter which ought to be of great concern to every believer, for, "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth. He will fulfill the desire of them that fear him; he also will hear their cry, and will save them" (Ps. 145:18, 19). There was something about the praying of Jesus that so impressed the disciples that they requested him to teach them to pray (Luke 11:1). May everyone of us enroll at once in the school of prayer with Christ as our Teacher. In response to the disciples' request, Jesus set forth the following principles of prayer.

I. The Right Relationship of the One Praying (v. 2).

1. Filial—"Father." The suppliant in prayer must be a child of God. God's gifts and blessings are for his children. This relationship can only be entered into through regeneration. Not all men have a right to say, "Our Father," when addressing God. Only those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ can so address him.

2. Fraternal—"Our Father." God has many children. His children are bound up together in nature and interests. Even in our secret prayer we should address him as "Our Father," which is a recognition of the interest of others alongside of ours.

II. The Right Attitude in Prayer (v. 2).

1. Reverent adoration—"Hallowed be thy name." As children we have certain rights and privileges, yet holy reverence becomes us.

2. Loyalty—"Thy kingdom come." When praying to God we should come with a spirit of loyalty which cries out, "Thy kingdom come." We should not only receive him as the Lord of our lives, but should loyally labor with him in inducing others to submit to him.

3. Submission—"Thy will be done." We should have no will of our own regarding the rule of God. We should let him direct us in all things.

III. The Right Spirit in Prayer (vv. 3-8).

1. Dependent faith—"Give us this day our daily bread" (v. 3). We should realize that not only bread, but life itself is ours to enjoy because of him and he is able to do for us "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

2. Penitence and love—"Forgive us our debts" (v. 4). We should come to him realizing that we have sinned, and cry out to him for forgiveness. Our heart should be so filled with love for others that we will forgive those who sin against us, as God has so willingly forgiven us.

3. Holiness and caution—"Lead us not into temptation" (v. 4). Because we are God's children, and realizing the depravity of our natures and the consequent tendency to practice that which displeases him, we should shrink from that which, if indulged in, would dishonor him, and earnestly cry unto him to lead us not into the place where we would likely fall.

4. Intercessory (vv. 5, 6). The man who asked for bread did not ask for himself, but for a friend. Prayer which pleases God is unselfish in its requests.

5. Perseverance (vv. 7, 8). Though the friend refused at first and offered excuses, because the one making the request would not take "No" for an answer, he arose from his bed and gave him as many as he needed. Prayer pleases God and gets results.

IV. Encouragement to Pray (vv. 9-12).

1. God's promise (vv. 9, 10). True prayer cannot fail of an answer, because God definitely promises that, "Every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

2. Example of an earthly father (vv. 11-13). No father will give a stone to his son who asked for bread, nor a serpent instead of a fish, nor a scorpion instead of an egg. God is infinitely more willing to answer the prayers of his children than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children.

V. The True Goal of All Prayer (v. 13).

God's best gift is himself in the person of his Holy Spirit. All those who practice the principles which Jesus taught in this model prayer shall experience the blessing of the Holy Spirit.

An Inner Life

A man who has no inner life is the slave of his surroundings, as the barometer is the obedient servant of the air at rest, and the weathercock the humble servant of the air in motion.—H. P. Amiel.

Mercy

As freely as the firmament embraces the world, or the sun pours forth impartially his beams, so mercy must encircle both friend and foe.—Schiller.

Machine Transforms Cloth Into Metal in Few Minutes

A machine which in a few minutes will change your hat from soft, supple felt to metal, the density of an army trench helmet, has been installed in the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago. The machine, which will metallize almost anything, was originally intended to apply layers of copper, steel, aluminum, lead and other metals to worn-out shafts and bearings. It may now begin a new fad in metallized articles of clothing.

The device, which in itself looks large and complicated, is rather simple in operation. It consists of a tiny air turbine which spins around 20,000 times a minute and with the aid of compressed air, acetylene and oxygen it will change a pure metal wire into small incandescent particles. These particles are fired from a "gun" and bombarded against the object to be coated. The metal can be transferred to wood, cement, cloth and other materials speedily and permanently.

READ what Mrs. Marcella Purdom of 308 North Pine St., Janesville, Wis., said: "After an illness a few years ago I was in a weakened condition for some time. I really thought I never would be strong again. I was so thin and had no appetite at all. I took several bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and my general condition was soon back to normal." New size, tabs. 50c. Liquid $1.00 and $1.35.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes, feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

The Goat That Sang Tenor

WHEN William McClenahan, newspaper correspondent of Port Deposit, Md., first heard about it, he didn't believe it. A farmer, so the neighborhood gossips said, had a goat that sang in a beautiful tenor voice. How did it happen?

Well, it seems that some member of the farmer's family had been careless and left a phonograph record of "Mother o' Mine" by John McCormack out in the yard. At least, that's the way Mr. McClenahan's story, which appeared in the Baltimore Sun, accounted for it.

The farmer and his singing goat became famous. People came to see it and paid for the privilege of hearing it sing. Then bad luck overtook the farmer. The goat stopped singing as suddenly as it had begun. So the farmer bought an expensive record by a famous grand opera star—"O Sole Mio," it was—and fed that to the goat.

The result was fatal. The goat began to sing but suddenly dropped dead. An autopsy revealed the fact that its throat was clogged up with what the veterinarian called "some foreign substance." They were Italian words and phrases. The goat was 100 per cent American, so of course, he choked to death on 'em.

His Unlucky Day

"YES, sir, I believe in that superstition about Friday, the 13th, bein' an unlucky day," said the Oldest Ranger in Yellowstone park. "I recollect one of 'em in particular."

"I was out on patrol and discovered I didn't have a bite of food in my grub bag and only one shell left in my trusty ol' gun. Well, I sneaked through the woods till I saw a brace of quail sittin' on a bush so I maneuvered aroun' so as to be sure of gettin' both of 'em with one shot."

"I let fly an', by golly, when I went to pick up them two birds I found that I'd killed six more that was sittin' on the other side of the bush. Just then I heard a big commotion out in a little lake nearby. There was a big buck deer that had been skeroed by my shot and had run out and got hisself mired down."

"I run out to help him but before I could get to him he drowned. As I was carryin' him to shore, I sank down in the mud an' water up over the tops of my boots. So I took 'em off to pour out the water and durned if there didn't flop out of 'em a dozen of the finest trout you ever did see."

"Well, I strung the quail an' the deer an' the trout on a pole so I could carry 'em easier. But my struggles to get the load up on my shoulders was jest too much of a strain on my suspender buttons. Durned if one didn't fly off with such force that it killed a rabbit 100 yards away."

"When that happened, I jest decided it wasn't no use to try to do any more huntin'. Seemed like it was my unlucky day, it bein' Friday, the 13th."

"Man Overboard!"

MEN who go down to the sea in ships frequently see or hear about some unusual occurrences. J. W. Putman of Anaheim, Calif., who once served in the United States navy, is no exception to that rule.

One hot, sticky day as the battleships and cruisers were steaming along off the coast of China a typhoon suddenly swooped down upon them. Despite the howling wind and raging waters, the vessels managed to keep their alignment.

In the midst of the storm a lieutenant decided that he wanted a cup of coffee. So a mess boy started across the deck with a cup of coffee, a pitcher of cream and a bowl of sugar on a tray. Just as he was about to open the door to the officers' quarters, a 61-foot wave swept across the deck.

It picked up the mess boy, juggled him for a second on its crest, then carried him 308 yards astern and deposited him at the door of the officers' quarters of the next ship in line. Opening the door, he walked in and said, "Here is the coffee you ordered, lieutenant. One lump, or two, and shall I pour in the cream?"

It had all happened so quickly that the mess boy didn't realize he was on another ship until the officer roared out: "I'm a captain, not a lieutenant! I didn't order any coffee, and what are you doing here?"

Indians Traced to Yellow Race

The original red man, the American Indian, came from pure yellow stock and did not carry any black strain from admixtures with natives of Oceania, reports Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of anthropology of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington. He brands as "fabulous" the theories that natives of the Oceanic islands left their imprint on the American continent. These islands were occupied by the Melanesian peoples only as recently as the first millennium before Christ, at which time the New world had been populated for several thousand years from Mongolian stock. Skulls have been found in the Americas which seem to indicate Melanesian origin, but these always prove to fall within the variations known to occur among the Indians, declares Doctor Hrdlicka.

Crocheting an Afghan,
Tomorrow's Heirloom

PATTERN 5254

What more conducive to "forty winks" than this fluffy, lacy afghan! Its crocheted warmth will ward off the most treacherous draughts, its color brighten and gladden any room it adorns. A very simple pattern to follow, too. The stripes look like tiny daisies strung together, and are in a crochet stitch which busy hands and needle soon learn to do by heart. Lovely in three shades of one color, it is also effective with each stripe a different color.

In pattern 5254 you will find directions for making the afghan; an illustration of it and of the stitches used; material requirements, and color suggestions.

Faces Their Fortune, Yet
They Don't Visit Beauty Shop

Mongolia harbors some queer persons whose faces keep them in food. Members of a certain Mongolian cult know the secret of making hair grow all over their faces, until they almost look like animals.

They terrorize simple villagers into providing them with food and clothing, and thus, their faces become their fortunes.
